Beyond Numbers!

Statistics and numbers indicate trends and provide perspectives. However, their veracity often comes under the scanner as the possibility of willful twisting and manipulations cannot be entirely ruled out. Andrew Lang, the Scottish Poet has the cheeky saying, “Some people use statistics as a drunk man uses lamp-posts—for support rather than for illumination.”

Apart from the dimensions of reliability, while speaking of human beings, an overemphasis on the aspects of statistics could probably bring about an apparent blurring of individuality. While speaking about children in need of care and protection, unfortunately terms such as ‘rising numbers’ and ‘falling numbers’ are used at times.

During calamities, accidents, terrorist attacks etc., the number of victims is mentioned. For the bereaving families, everyone included in the statistics are persons with names, identities and unique qualities, the precise reason why someone is ‘missed’ even when spatial distances increase. In other words, everyone in the ‘number’ is earned over moments of love, sadness, struggles and joys along the road of life.

As we reach out to children in need of care and protection, let us strive to ‘earn’ every young person in difficult circumstances by imprinting an indelible mark of love on their hearts. Let every number count!
